At Rosewood Mayakobá, everyday is a celebration of the natural beauty of the Yucatán peninsula. Incorporating a Mayan technique for managing the forest called socoleo, Mayakobá's architects crafted a "green vision" in which the natural and the man-made intertwine, complementing and enhancing each other. Beach, golf course, mangrove and jungle are linked by an aquamarine chain of lagoons and canals, man-made but using natural, subterranean water.

Mayakobá, one of the largest and most ambitious projects on the Riviera Maya, has become an eco-benchmark against which future developments will be judged.

"When we open a golf course, it's my hope that people will look at it and say that it appears to be part of the landscape. I like to think that we leave a property in better environmental condition than we found it."

— Greg Norman, El Camaleón's Master Designer

El Camaleón Golf Course in Mayakobá was created to harmonize with its unspoiled tropical environment. With a commitment to preserving the delicate ecosystem, each hole is unique. The par-72 course offers players an ever-shifting terrain that moves gracefully from jungle, mangroves, and limestone canals to a turquoise sea.
